Once upon a time animals lived together in harmony.

This is so because no animal was killing another animal for food. Every animal grew his or her own crops. Therefore, no animal lacked food. There was no need to hurt other animals for food.

Life was very interesting. The animals visited one another. They also shared food because most of them used to have enough to spare. When there was little or no work to do, the animals could come together to cerebrate. Every animal prepared enough food and sweet beer. They sang, ate and drank all night.

Although life was good, the animals had one problem. The problem was Hare. Hare was very lazy, but cuming. He never grew any crops. Year in year out. Hare relied on begging food from the other animals. He used to visit his friends' homes during meal times so that he could eat with them. The animals would give hare extra food reciprocated any of the generosity he enjoyed from his friends. This went on for years.

Later, the animals started complaining about hare's behaviour. They agreed to stop entertaining him in their homes. This was not because the animals had become mean but because they felt that hare was not leaning from their generosity, so hare had no food.

My friends have decided to give me food no more, what do I do? Hare thought to himself. 'I know what I will do'. I will be stealing from their gardens and granaries. Hare said to himself. So hare started stealing from the other animals. Every now and then, two or more animals would complain that they had been robbed.

All animals suspected that it was Hare who has stealing their crops. The animals got angry with Hare and they all agreed to catch him. Many animals tried to arrest Hare but none managed to catch him, but before they took him to their king. Hare would trick them and he would run away. For example, Hyena once caught him. Hare smeared Hyena's mouth with some honey.
